Irate Folks Deride Rabbi's "Bar Mitzvah Factory" And Catering

A group of irate Syosset, Long Island, N. Y., residents recently called on the Oyster Bay Town Board to ascertain whether the rabbi of the East Nassau Hebrew Congregation is running a "bar mitzvah factory" and kosher catering business disrupting the tranquility of the community, says the New York Times. Members of the Syosset Homeowners and Birchwood Park Association leveled charges of such actions at a meeting of the Town Board.

"Here we are, a bunch of Jews banding together to prosecute a rabbi," one of the association members declared. "But he is hiding behind a church cloak and we've got to do something about him."

Spokesmen for the group complained that Rabbi Morris Appleman had expanded his catering services beyond the legitimate needs of his 2,500-member congregation and was violating a zoning ordinance. The residents also expressed concern over mounting automobile traffic resulting from weekend catering services at the synagogue at 310 South Oyster Bay Road.

"Anybody who says that is a liar," Rabbi Appleman declared, when apprised of the complaints. "These people must belong to another temple. There is no problem here, but they (the residents) are making a problem. We try to keep down traffic. We put the cars on a lot next to the temple when we have affairs."

Asked if he operated a valet service in which young men park cars on adjacent streets for persons attending social events at the temple, Rabbi Appleman said: "Anybody who says that is a liar."

A number of residents said at the meeting that increased traffic was causing concern for the safety of children.

"You buy a house for $25,000 or $30,000 and all of a sudden it's a traffic area," a woman resident, who requested anonymity, said to

Factor Of Holy Days Ended Two-Day N.Y. Fish Price War

Five hundred independent retail fish dealers, of New York, battling against the price wholesalers are charging for fresh-water fish, had to admit that they were beaten.

Thus ended a two-day price skirmish at Peck Slip, the fresh-water section of the sprawling Fulton Fish Market. An attempted boycott was only partly successful, reports the New York Times. After a meeting of wholesalers and members of the United Retail Fish Dealers Association of New York City the boycott was officially called off.

The depletion of the once plentiful supply from the Great Lakes because of pollution and adverse economic factors for fishermen was blamed for the shorter supply and higher prices.

A leading wholesaler said the great bulk of New York's fresh-water fish was now supplied by Canada, often from such distant provinces as Manitoba and Saskatchewan, and from Great Slave Lake in the Northwest Territories.

A major factor in stopping the boycott attempt was the oncoming Jewish high holy days when white-fish, yellow pike and carp — all fresh-water fish — are in heavy demand for making gefüllte fish. Benjamin Mazure, partner of a Front Street fish company supplying hotels and restaurants, said housewives would be buying fish as traditional fare for the holy days even if it cost more than steak.

Herman Nussbaum, Brooklyn fish retailer who is general manager of the United Retail Fish Dealers Association, said wholesale prices had been "out of reason all summer long" reaching 90 cents a pound and more for better quality fish, compared with 65 to 70 cents six months ago. He has been retailing the fish for $1.10, he said, and other retailers have been charging as much as $1.20.

Girding for battle retailers of the fish dealers association posted placards in their windows protest-

"Man In Trunk", Convicted As Volunteer Spy For Egypt Against Israel, Called "Egotistic Adventurer Without Feeling Or Conscience"

Mordecai Louk, aged 29, the Israeli rescued last year from a "diplomatic trunk" about to be loaded on board an Egyptian aircraft at Rome airport, was convicted in Jerusalem of spying for Egypt on six counts punishable with life imprisonment, according to the London Times. Louk, who pleaded not guilty on all counts, although he admitted having volunteered to spy against Israel for the Egyptians, said in court after hearing the verdict:

"Those hours in the trunk gave me a clear picture of how I should conduct myself in future in honest society." He also said he was willing to receive any sentence "with love".

The three judges said he had not told the truth about how he came to be packed in the trunk.

Louk contended in evidence that the Egyptians turned against him because he had not fulfilled his undertakings to supply information about the characters and weaknesses of Israel pilots and sailors in Italy who might be blackmailed or enticed into serving Egyptian intelligence.

After the court dismissed that claim H. Grossman, Louk's counsel, argued that the fact that the Egyptians had packed Louk in the trunk proved that he had broken with them; but the judges said it was not necessarily so.

The court said in the judgment that Louk acknowledged he had stolen, across the border of the Gaza strip in November, 1961, because he was dissatisfied with conditions in Israel and hoped the Egyptians would help him to reach Australia, Canada, or another country.

He admitted giving information to the Egyptian intelligence in Gaza and Cairo, and that at the end of 1962 or in early 1963 he volunteered to serve Egyptian intelligence against Israel. He underwent six months training in Cairo and was sent to Naples, where he received 75,000 lire (£43) a month at first, and later 50,000 lire, from Egyptian agents.

He claimed he volunteered his services only as a device to get out of jail after he lost hopes of obtaining visas for Australia or Canada, but that he never intended fulfilling the Egyptian orders. He said he explained to the agents in Naples that he could not operate properly because, as a foreigner, he lacked an Italian working permit.

The court said that no matter how inefficient Egyptian intelligence might be it was inconceivable that they would pay Louk for a year and four months if he produced no information.

Defence counsel, in a mitigation plea, asked the court to take into account that Louk had already suffered in the Egyptian trunk for his crimes. "There is no greater deterrent to a potential sinner, than the example of Louk in the trunk", Mr. Grossman said, reports the London Times. "No court could devise a severer penalty and more effective warning of what happens to persons who fall into Egyptian hands." He also argued that Louk had unwittingly helped Israel security by disrupting Egyptian intelligence in Italy.

Ezra Hadaya, the district attorney, called Louk an "egotistic adventurer without feeling or conscience", and asked for the maximum sentence of life imprisonment.

His name is also spelled "Luk" in some dispatches. His case briefly was that he had left Israel because he was "fed up" with the country and his wife and that he had agreed to spy for the Egyptians only as a means of getting out of jail in Cairo, says the New York Times. He said he had given them only useless information.

The chief of the district court, Justice Henry Baker, said in a decision that took one hour and fifteen minutes to read, that Luk's story in effect was full of holes. Justice Baker said he gave Egyptian intelligence more credit than to believe that Luk had fed it useless information for months while working for it in Italy.

"The court has not ascertained why he landed in the trunk," the justice said, but there is no doubt that he consorted with enemy agents. Under Israeli law it was up to the defendent to prove that such dealings are innocent, and Luk, the court said, had not done so.

The 29-year-old Luk sat with two policemen in the prisoners' dock of the tiny courtroom. The nattiest man in the room, he wore a light gray suit with handkerchief carefully arranged in the breast pocket. His hair was closely cropped and he wore dark glasses.

The Moroccan-born Israeli listened to the judge without expression but rose smartly when asked whether he had anything to say.

"I am here to receive the judgment and will receive it willingly whatever it is," he said. "My conscience will not bother me as I did not hurt anyone in Israel nor my homeland, where I was raised."

Luk had been found bound and gagged in the trunk, which was about to be shipped by Egyptian authorities to Cairo. An Italian customs official who would not normally have opened the diplomatic crate heard a moan and made the discovery, says the New York Times. Four Egyptian Embassy officials later were expelled from Italy.

Luk asked to return to Israel and this gave rise to stories that he was a double agent, that is spying for Israel while ostensibly spying for the Egyptians. His defense attorney, Haim Grosman, said in pledding for mitigation of the sentence that "maybe he was spying for another power."

Luk had contended that crossing into Gaza was not illegal, because it had not been proved that the disputed area was outside Israel. Two other counts dealing with giving information to the Egyptians in Gaza also should be dismissed for the same reason, he said. The court rejected these arguments.

The court similarly rejected Luk's contention that the information he admitted giving was not harmful to Israel.

Luk had served in the Israeli Army and left a wife and three children when he fled to Egypt. He said he had hoped the Egyptians would help him to emigrate to Canada or Australia. Instead,

People Were Wall-To-Wall When That $20 Million N.Y. Store Opened

There were wall-to-wall people as Alexander's opened its $20 million East Side New York department store just recently.

Between the ribbon-cutting at 9:30 A.M. and closing time 12 hours later, well over 100,000 shoppers squeezed and elbowed their way through the new chandeliered cash-and-carry emporium at Lexington Avenue and 58th Street, says the New York Times. The officials of the most expensive store in New York City seemed gratified by the mob scene.

Wearing blue ribbons that said "Welcome to the New Incredible Alexander's," executives stood by smiling as the bargain sweaters got man-handled and the cash registers rang and rang and rang.

"It's incredible," said Alexander Farkas, president of the 37-year-old soft-goods chain, and grandson of the man for whom it was named.

There was definite campaign flavor to the opening. As Mayor Wagner cut the ribbon with a 29-pound pair of steel scissors, three feet long, campaign workers for Representative John V. Lindsay, the Republican-Liberal candidate for mayor, paraded outside with placards and passed out leaflets.

Mr. Lindsay was inside, taking part in the ceremony, as were two other men wishing to succeed Mr. Wagner — City Controller Abraham D. Beame and City Council President Paul R. Screvane, contenders for the Democratic mayoral nomination, later won by Mr. Beame.

Senator Jacob Javits was also there and Manhattan Borough President Constance Baker Motley arrived late.

All three mayoral candidates used the occasion to make brief campaign speeches to newsmen and then everybody congratulated Alexander Farkas and his father, George, the founder and chairman of the ready-to-wear chain, on the opening of their seventh store.

With 408,000 square feet and nine levels — six of which are selling floors, it is the biggest department store built in New York since Saks Fifth Avenue went up in 1924. Faced mostly in marble, it occupies most of the square block bounded by East 58th and 59th Streets and Lexington and Third Avenues.

Mr. Wagner got more attention from the customers than any of the other politicians. As he left the store, he was mobbed by women trying to shake his hand.

But as soon as his limousine pulled away, the women got down to business, digging in at counters, everywhere. New arrivals joined them in droves.

By 7 o'clock, the shoppers got so thick that the human heat defeated the air conditioning, driving the inside temperature up from its normal 75 degrees to 82.

Soldiers Blow Up "Pump For Pump" In Jordan

Israeli soldiers who blew up eleven water pumps in Jordan recently spread leaflets among the farms in the Qalqilya area warning against further terrorist raids in Israel by Jordan-based Arabs.

The leaflets stated that the Israeli pre-dawn strike into Jordan was in response to raids from the Qalqilya area over a period of ten weeks. They warned that the Arab farmers would not enjoy tranquility, says the New York Times writer, James Feron, so long as there was no tranquillity on the Israeli side of the border.

El Fateh guerrillas are believed to be behind the Arab forays. These Arab commandos, thought to be supported by Syria, are dedicated to violent action against Israel. They have been publicly disavowed by the Arab nations. The name El Fateh means "the conquest."

Israeli officials are satisfied that the United Arab Republic and Lebanon have taken measures against the guerrillas, but seventeen acts of sabotage have been launched from Jordan since the first of the year.

The Israeli action in the Qalqilya area, the second reprisal measure in ten weeks, was considered part of an effort to bring pressure on the Jordanian Government to take steps against the guerrillas.

The unsettled nature of the Israel-Jordan border was underlined several hours after the Israeli raid when another incident occurred farther north in the Jordan River valley.

An Israeli border patrol came under Jordanian light-arms fire near the border settlements of Gesher. The fire was returned and after three hours a United Nations unit, one of several posted permanently in the border area, caused both sides to observe a cease-fire.

The Jordanian radio in Jerusalem seemed to play down the Israeli thrust at Qalqilya. It was the second item on the main news program. Officials of Western embassies had been asked to impress upon Israel the "grave consequences" of such raids, the broadcast said.

An Israeli Army spokesman said the "warning action" at Qalqilya, which is only 12 miles from Tel-Aviv, remained undetected by Jordanian units until the pumping stations had been blown up. Counter-shelling of the Eyal border kibbutz, where forewarned settlers had retired to bomb shelters, ended when the Jordanian guns were put out of action.

Afternoon newspapers in Israel applauded the raid as a model operation militarily and politically. "A pump for a pump," one headline read, says the New York

Israeli Hebrew Novelist Was Highlight Of Israel Night At Cornell U.

One of the outstanding Hebrew novelists of Israel, Moshe Shamir, was the guest speaker at the annual Israel Night, highlight of the fourteenth annual Educators Seminar, held on the campus of Cornell University for three weeks under the auspices of the department of education and culture of the Jewish Agency-American Section. Mr. Shamir is one of eleven leading Jewish authors and scholars serving as members of the faculty, and visiting lecturers, at the Institute attended by some 100 American Jewish educators from throughout the country.

Other speakers at the Israel Night meeting were: Dr. Samuel M. Blumenfield, director of the education and culture department of the Jewish Agency-American Section, who presented an evaluation of "Shamir's Contribution To Hebrew Reborn;" and Professor Milton Konwitz, of Cornell University, who served as chairman.

Provost Thomas Mackesey, of Cornell University, extended greetings in behalf of the University. Israel Night also included a program of Israeli folk songs and dances under the supervision of Harold Greenberg who served as coordinator of the summer institute.

Mr. Shamir, who is a sabra (native Israeli) born in Safad, in 1921, is the winner of many Israeli prizes for his novels. He won the Ussishkin Prize in 1948 and the Bialik Prize in 1955. One of his novels, "King Of Flesh And Blood," was published in English by Vanguard Press in 1958. An excerpt from his first novel, "He Walked Through The Fields," appeared in the anthology, "Sound The Great Trumpet," published by Whittier Books in 1955.

The annual Educators Seminar, on the campus of Cornell University, is conducted by the department of education and culture of the Jewish Agency-American Section, in cooperation with the Jewish Teachers Colleges of Baltimore, Maryland; Boston, Mass.; and Philadelphia, Pa., the American Association for Jewish Education, and the Bnai Brith Hillel Foundation at Cornell.

FACTOR OF HOLY DAYS

ing the high wholesale prices of yellow pike, white fish, and carp, and declaring: "We therefore refuse to handle it."

Then early one Monday morning, the big days of the week of the open air market at Peck Slip, they attempted to boycott, and considerable pressure and some hot words were the order of the day. Yet the boycott was only partially successful, says the New York Times. The big chain stores, not members of the association, did not take part in the boycott, and from the start some of the independents were buying too.

The Peck Slip market area consists of a wide expanse of squalid paving blocks where 4,000 to 5,000 boxes containing 50 pounds net of iced fish are stacked on the pavement and sold during an average week, very early in the morning. Ancient crumbling buildings, to give way to a renewal project in the near future, house wholesalers, and over on the corner is a saloon right out of the gay nineties.

Herbert Ackerman, vice president of Bell Fish Company, wholesaler, 29 Peck Slip, said, "We can't promise lower prices. It's impossible. We hope it doesn't get worse. Each year we are getting less fish from the Great Lakes. And we have to compete with Chicago and midwest cities for the fish. There are extra trucking charges for the fish from Western Canada."

THE PROGRAM OF THE MONTREAL Y.M.-Y.W.H.A. HAS FOLLOWED THE JEWISH POPULATION WITH SIX BRANCHES

By Irving Riddell, 4300 Western Avenue, Montreal, president of the Y.M.-Y.W.H.A.

The following article appeared in the Montreal Gazette:

The Young Men's and Young Women's Hebrew Association of Montreal is this year completing its 55th year of corporate life. It began not as a service planned by the leadership of the community, but by spontaneous grouping of boys and young men into friendship clubs designed to satisfy the needs of a basically immigrant generation, in the days when the New Canadian lived under numerous social, economic and psychological pressures.

This tradition of association for self-help has been the strongest force influencing the growth of the 'Y' — a tradition which was encouraged by men like the late Jacob Goldstein, Louis Rubenstein, Sol Kellert, and H. E. Herschorn, highly respected leaders in the Jewish community who joined the young founders, and between 1912 and 1960, helped to develop the stature and services of the growing 'Y' in greater Montreal.

The tradition of self-dependence is still manifested in the fiscal policy of the Association. The 'Y' maintains itself through its own efforts; through membership fees and more particularly through the personal involvement and support of 1493 men "Governors" and 634 Women "Governors."

Until 1949 the Young Men's and Young Women's Hebrew Association of Montreal, which was first organized in 1918 maintained a separate existence; but in 1949 the Men's and Women's Associations were merged, and the new Association became the Young Men's and Young Women's Hebrew Association of Montreal.

The Neighbourhood House of Montreal which was organized in 1927 as a group-work service to the deprived areas of our community, in the course of years developed a fine tradition of seeking out and serving areas of special need.

In May of 1965 the Neighbourhood House program was merged with the 'Y', and Neighbourhood House will now become a Branch of the Metropolitan Association whose name will be modified to record the merger, which we hope will bring about a further development of Neighbourhood programming.

The immediate goals of the Association have varied with the circumstances prevailing decade after decade. Since the war, the psychological revolution in the lives of the youth, the changes in the status of the family unit, the changing value system among teenagers and the emergence of special problems such as the school "drop out" have been the major concerns of the program.

But underlying these specific areas of concern, the Association has steadily held to two major goals which have influenced all our programs and services. One is the basic objective of creating a physical, mental and spiritual climate in which young people can develop their highest potential as individuals and as citizens. The other is the interpretation of specifically Jewish values in their present-day relevance, and the encouragement to old and young alike to explore their Jewish roots and strengthen their Jewish identity.

The effort to achieve these goals in its contact with more than 15,000 members, has obliged the Association to decentralize its operation by establishing largely autonomous branches, which are subject to the overall authority of the Metropolitan Board of Directors. The latter body exercises responsibility for policy and finance, but the operation of the widespread program is the responsibility of the branches.

Not only the size of the membership has motivated the development of the Branch structure: the dispersal of areas of Jewish residence over the Island of Montreal has been an equally deciding factor. The 'Y' program has followed the Jewish population, and the Association now operates the following Branches:

(1) The Snowdon Branch — at 5500 Westbury Avenue is the largest of the Branches, located in what is still the most populous Jewish residential area in Montreal.

(2) The Sir Mortimer B. Davis Branch. Formerly located on Mount Royal Avenue, the first Davis Building has been sold to the University of Montreal; and a new Davis Building is now being erected in the City of Cote St. Luc, to house the 'Y' program which will serve the growing Jewish population in that city, in Western Notre Dame de Grace, in Montreal West and in Western Hampstead.

(3) The Chomedey Branch. A highly developed program for hundreds of children and some adults formerly operated separately by the Association and Neighbourhood House in the City of Chomedey, has been merged into a single Branch now operating in rented quarters.

(4) The Camp Branch. Now in its third season of operation, the 'Y' Country Camp located near Huberdeau, Quebec, serves 800 campers each summer in two one-month periods.

(5) The Neighbourhood House Branch. This newest of the 'Y' Branches will continue and develop its program in the Cote des Nieges area, its Day Camp and the Day Nursery program, and its Val Royal extension service.

(6) The Saidye Bronfman Centre Branch. Pursuant to the announcement made in September 1964, that the children of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Bronfman will present the Association with a building, to be named in honour of their mother, as a home for the adult education and cultural program of the Association, a separate Branch Board of Management was established to develop the program. The Saidye Bronfman Centre building will be erected on St. Catherine Road adjoining the Snowdon Branch. Construction will begin this Fall, and completion is expected in the Fall of 1968.

The tradition of self-dependence to which I have alluded above, has found a significant manifestation in the Association's attitude to the volunteer lay leader. The entire spread of the Association — its six branches, its more than 500 individual programs and projects, all are governed by a complex of more than 90 lay committees, involving in excess of 700 men and women, about 10 per cent of the 'Y's adult membership.

he added, he spent two years in a Cairo prison before agreeing to become a spy.

His job, he said, was to submit information on Israeli sailors and pilots he met in Naples. When Ezra Hadaya, the Jerusalem district attorney, asked for a life sentence for Luk as an example to others, Mr. Grossman, the defense lawyer, said Luk had been punished enough, in the trunk and afterward. "He risked his life by escaping from the box," the lawyer added, says the New York Times. "The reason for his being put into a trunk remains a mystery," Mr. Grossman said.

Orthodox Union Urges Dignity In Funeral Rituals

Moses I. Feuerstein, president of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America points out: "Many Jewish funerals, by lavish floral displays and unholy musical extravaganzas are violating the canons of dignity and the religious ritual. A funeral is a deeply meaningful religious function. To do honor to the deceased with traditional appropriateness, it must cumply with the standards of dignity, sanctity, and modesty of a solemn religious service." The Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America represents 3,000 synagogues throughout the United States and Canada.

Mr. Feuerstein further stated: "Such funeral procedures often cause deep emotional distress to the families involved. These objectionable practices contradict all accepted modes of good taste, circumvent the Biblical and Talmudical laws concerning the burial, and deny the equality of all deceased members of the faith which should find expression in the funeral. Strict religious requirements should be followed in funeral and burial practices, in full accord with Jewish tradition. Jewish law prescribes specific ritual procedures, from death to interment, requiring competent religious guidance. Public viewing is contrary to Jewish law which considers such practice a desecration. Humility and decorum should give expression to the fact that the funeral is a most solemn ritual of holy importance."

Mr. Feuerstein called upon the Jewish community to abide by the Jewish Funeral Guide issued by the Joint Funeral Standards Committee of the Rabbinical Council of America and the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregation of America. This Guide is part of an accord between these two organizations and the Jewish Funeral Directors of America, Inc.

"Both, the bereaved family and the funeral director," Mr. Feuerstein said "have the sacred obligation to restore the Jewish funeral to its age-hallowed sanctity. We have the assurance of cooperation from the Jewish Funeral Directors of America. We have a Joint Committee dealing with non-compliance. Much progress has been made. With proper communal awareness, to be fostered through our congregations, we have reason to hope that these profanations will soon disappear from the Jewish scene."

PEOPLE WERE WALL-TO-WALL

Signs of newness were everywhere. Carpenters worked feverishly trying to finish the fifth-floor restaurant. Balls of fuzz, rubbed off the carpets by many feet, rolled listlessly under the glistening pipe racks. But it was the crush of the crowd that really symbolized Alexander's.

"Oy," said a woman recovering from an elbow chop. "I can't stand all these people," said a teen-age girl trying to find an exit. "Getting out, getting out," shouted an elderly woman as the elevator reached the main floor, says the New York Times. "All right, all right," said an annoyed 12-year-old girl in pigtails behind her. "Don't get excited," the gray-haired woman huffed back. "I'm not pushing, just saying."

Hooray, Joseph Will Stay In Kindergarten Another Year

By Evelyn Peters, Joint Distribution Committee Day-Care Consultant

We had to make a decision about Joseph. Joseph was seven, overage for the kindergarten. But he was doing so well there. What to do? It was one of the special problems I had to deal with when I reached Shiraz on my tour of the Joint Distribution Committee-supported kindergartens in Iran in July. Joseph, a dwarf, was brought to the Shiraz kindergarten four years ago, when he was three years old. In addition to his tininess, Joseph was unable to talk; he was almost completely deaf and had never learned.

During his first year in the kindergarten Joseph just sat in a corner, doing and saying nothing. It was impossible to draw him into any activity; he could not hear the teachers. The other children ignored him. He sat alone, withdrawn and remote from everything.

Joseph was given special medical attention at the local, and famous, Nemazee Hospital, but the doctors there only confirmed JDC's own medical findings. Joseph was doomed to lifetime deafness, in addition to the emotional and physical handicaps suffered by a dwarf. But in the meantime, the extra food he got at the kindergarten and the fresh air were doing wonders for Joseph. He even grew a little. When I saw him two years ago his hair was strong and shiny, his eyes were bright, and his cheeks were rounded. Last year I saw Joseph again. This time he was busy playing, but still by himself. The teachers were most solicitous but the children still ignored him.

This year Joseph is seven years old, beyond kindergarten age. And now we had to decide whether Joseph could stay for another year. If he left the kindergarten he would have no place to go. There is no school for the deaf in Shiraz.

JDC supports five kindergartens in Iran, with an average monthly enrollment of 1,375 children between three and six. JDC also helps to feed an average of 7,340 children a month in school canteens. Funds for JDC's medical, welfare, educational, and cultural programs in Iran and other countries throughout the world come mainly from the campaigns of the United Jewish Appeal.

This year, when I arrived at the kindergarten, there was Joseph in the midst of a group of boys, making his way to the top of the climbing-bars and shouting away with his friends. And friends they were; Joseph and the four other youngsters did everything together. They sat together at story time, to play with blocks and in sand.

One day, the teachers told me, all five youngsters had scampered to the top of the climbing-bars and began shouting, "Shah-'n-shah, Shah-'n-shah," the customary greeting for the Shah of Iran. They had kept this up for a long time, with Joseph shouting as loudly as the rest. When one of the teachers had suggested they try another chant, Joseph's friends had said: "But this is the only thing Joseph can shout." So they had continued to hail the absent Shah at the top of their voices.

Joseph is now a full-fledged member of the class, participating in every activity. He has many friends now, friends who make allowances for his deafness and his smallness. How could we possibly turn him out? The decision was obvious. Joseph would stay, at least for another year.

THEY ARE STILL IN FLIGHT

By Charles H. Jordan, Director-General of the Joint Distribution Committee

It is an old Jewish tradition to mark the beginning of a new year with serious contemplation of the year just gone by. Any report made for any year on the state of the Joint Distribution Committee is basically a report on the state of the Jews of the world. A difficult year for the Jews of the world is a difficult year, full of work and woes and problems, for JDC. Contrariwise, if it is a difficult year for JDC, then it is a difficult year for the needy Jews and communities of the world. For the primary source of healing and comfort for so many of those in want and distress is JDC.

The year gone by has not been a good year for the Jews of the world. Economic conditions, political upheavals, and religious fanaticism have sorely affected country after country and, as is so often the case, the Jews of those countries have been amongst the first and most pitiful victims. Today, 20 years after the end of World War II, Jews are still in flight; the movement goes on from countries where Jews are not welcome, from countries where Jews cannot make a living, to countries where they can find peace and security.

Very often they leave countries where they were not much of a problem or no problem at all for JDC and come to countries where, because they are penniless and homeless, they present new and magnified problems to JDC. They are a responsibility which we cannot avoid for, as enunciated in the very beginning of our history, JDC works on the basic assumption that Jews have a right to live in the countries of their birth or in the countries of their adoption and that it is our obligation to serve the needy among them wherever they may be.

This is not the time or place for a recounting of facts and figures. They have been given over and over again. The one basic figure that cast a shadow on all of our programs for the past year was the loss of more than $7,000,000 (seven million dollars) in reparations money that we had been getting through the Conference on Jewish Material Claims Against Germany. We had to cut down on our programs. We tried to cut without causing suffering to people, because people are our basic interest. We managed to cut down and keep within certain expenditures, but in the process people were hurt, people did suffer.

Due to the cumulative effect of all we have done in the past, this hurt and suffering has been kept down to a minimum. If, however, we have to continue to work within this curtailed budget and if, as is very likely, the need will continue at the present rate, there may well lie tragedy ahead for those whose lives are miserable enough as things stand now.

What will happen in the year to come depends entirely on the Jews in the affluent and secure parts of the world. If they give us the tools, we will do the job. It is in their hands. We, and the people who so sorely need us, wait.

Martin Buber Memorial Held By N.Y. American Friends Of Hebrew U.

Martin Buber's "universalism" was described by Paul Tillich, one of the world's leading Christian theologians, as having "trespassed any particular religion, although it was derived from his interpretation of Judaism." Speaking at the Martin Buber Memorial in the Park Avenue Synagogue, in New York, under the auspices of the American Friends of the Hebrew University, Professor Tillich recently referred to his close personal relationship with Buber as "a dialogue which lasted with many interruptions for forty years."

The University of Chicago scholar made many references to incidents in which Buber affected his own philosophical approach, concluding, "As long as I have known Martin Buber, I felt his reality as something which transcends bodily presence or intellectual influence. He was there in the midst of the Western world, a part of it, a power in it, through his person, but also independent of him as an individual being, as a Spiritual reality impossible to be overlooked, provoking Yes or No or both. This Spiritual reality which was in the man, Martin Buber, will last for a long time in future history and open up for many that which is above history."

Professor Maurice Friedman, of Sarah Lawrence College, an acknowledged authority on the works of Martin Buber, similarly described Buber as "one of the great figures not only of a people but of mankind, not only for this age but for ages to come."

To demonstrate Martin Buber's strong influence on modern thought, Professor Friedman called on the words of a widely divergent group of the leading thinkers of the century, including the poet, T. S. Eliot; the Italian novelist, Ignazio Silone; the Lebanese Ambassador to the United Nations, Charles Malik; and Dag Hammerskjold. In his own conclusion, he said, "In a time in which we are in danger of losing our birthright as human beings, Martin Buber has given us again an image of man."

Professor Seymour Siegel, of the Jewish Theological Seminary, spoke of Martin Buber's attachment to Zionism. He quoted Buber as saying, "Zionism meant for me the restoration of the connection, the renewed taking root in the community . . . And the most sparkling wealth of intellectuality, the most luxuriant seeming productivity cannot compensate the detached man for the holy insignia of humanity, rootedness, binding, wholeness."

Dr. Henry Sonneborn III, a co-chairman of the America-Israel University Program, announced at the meeting that the American Friends of the Hebrew University is planning a suitable memorial for Martin Buber on the campus of the Hebrew University where Buber had spent the last two decades of his teaching years as Professor of Social Philosophy. Rabbi Judah Nadich, leader of the Park Avenue Synagogue, who presided, read two Psalms and Cantor Martin Dank sang the El Mole Rahamim, the traditional memorial chant. The Memorial program included readings from Buber's "Tales Of The Hasidim", by Ludwig Donath, the noted star of stage and screen.

It Always Rains on Shabbos

By Miriam Pavey, in the Liberal Jewish Monthly, of London, England

He was a little man, the Rov. Small, wiry, clad in kaftan and kappel, his beard and peyos (earlocks) whispy and grey. He was sixty, seventy? No one knew, for he had always been old; it seemed hardly possible that he had ever been young. He had been young once, when, freshly ordained he had come from the old country to the East End of London, but those who remembered him then were either dead or had moved away. Now he was just the Rov, the old Rabbi who buried people and occasionally married eager-eyed couples when they chose to patronise his little Stiebl (study) rather than one of the fashionable West End Synagogues.

"Baruchu es adonoy . . ." It was Shabbos (Sabbath) and once again the Rov was intoning the Service. Did he ever stop? One might well wonder for neither he nor his Service changed as the years went on. "Shema Yisroel . . ." The congregation was sparse, barely a minyan, this Shabbos as every Shabbos, and the rain beat down unceasingly this Shabbos as every Shabbos. "It always rains on Shabbos." The little Rov had heard those words time and again when visiting his congregation to find out why they never came. "You know how it is, Rabbi. The wife doesn't feel like getting up and then there are the kids. Those kids! You know, take them outside the door and they're into every puddle this side of the Aldgate Pump and then the car gets clogged with water. Oh, come now, Rabbi, sure you know we all come to Shool by car, you must have seen them parked around the corner. That's life."

"Ezros mosenu . . ." Perhaps just once it might not rain on Shabbos. The Rov could not remember when it hadn't. Oh, yes, five weeks ago, but then you couldn't be certain it wouldn't. He reflected that England was not the old country. Did the others feel the same? He wondered. But then they were all dead or they had gone to Golders Green, that Mecca in N.W.11, and their children — No, better to leave things as they were. And so the Service concluded and there was hot "cholent," Hamdaloh, and the week began again and people were born and people died and life went on and it was Shabbos. But surely this bright sunlit day was not Shabbos!

"Lecho adonoy. . . ." The little Rov intoned to a sparse congregation. It wasn't raining, where were the others? "But Rabbi." So it was Monday again, time for meeting congregants. "You must realise, Rabbi. Such a fine day, the first fine Shabbos for I don't know how long. We had to take the kids to the country for a picnic. That's what happened. You know how it is. . . ." And life went on.
